City Collectors' Paintings Too Small for Large Space

By INA D. D. UHTHOFF

Last week there was not space to go into details of the "Victoria Collectors" contribution to the present showing at the gallery, but a second study of any exhibition produces a more leisured and balanced appraisal.

The paintings are, on a whole, too small to show up well in the largest gallery, they need more intimate grouping as they were painted in an age when meticulous finish and attention to detail was more appreciated.

But, a small painting by Sir David Wilkie holds its own by its freshness and beauty of technique. A Turner sketch is so full of vigor and one might almost say fury, that it cannot be overlooked.

Other small ones of great beauty are "Farm Scene" by Samuel Palmer which was probably a study for one of his important paintings. The Homer Watson is rich in feeling and in quality of paint. George Richmond's portrait study is a tenderly felt painting of a little girl in the best manner of this distinguished Royal Academician.

Octavius Oakley had his place in the art of the Victorian era and Herbert Finn is remembered as a painter of London in all her moods.

J. W. Morrice helped to put Canadian painting on the map in the early days. He brought back from Paris what were then advanced ideas on the use of color and freer brushwork. There are two good examples of his landscapes in oils.

We seldom see the water colors of F. M. Bell-Smith, but 50 years ago he was one of the most popular of Canadian painters.

Maurice Cullen, like Morrice, interpreted the Canadian scene with a freshness and vigor that was new and stimulating at a time when the "treacle school" still held sway. This can be seen in his two oils of Quebec and vicinity.

The water color by C. John Colling's I find disappointing by comparison with much of his smaller work which possesses a jewel-like quality all its own.

In the contemporary section the nude by Peter Aspell of Vancouver steals the show with its lovely color and sensitive handling of line. This artist has come far in the last few years.

CCF Hits 'Propaganda'

Wording on Bills Causes Uproar

The legislature was in an uproar Wednesday over what appeared to be two separate and different printings of the government's contentious new bill to amend the Trades Union Act.

One of them was blank on the back. The other contained a statement which CCF opposition leader Strachan branded as a downright "surreptitious misleading propaganda."

He demanded to know who was responsible for putting such a statement on the back of a government bill.

The uproar got so hot that committee chairman Alex Matthew (SC-Vancouver East) recalled Speaker Hugh Shantz who promised to conduct a "thorough investigation" and report back to the House.

During the debate Labor Minister Wicks said he did not know how the statement came to be included in the later printing of the bill. And, he said, he had been in touch with the Queen's Printer. Don McDairmid and neither did he have any information as to its origin.

This created an uproar. Randolph Harding (CCF-Kaslo-Slocan) urged a full investigation. Mr. Strachan said it appeared members of the House were given one bill and the public another—with the propaganda statement supporting the legislation.

ULTERIOR MOTIVE?

Explaining to the speaker, Mr. Strachan said there should be an investigation to decide if "the Queen's Printer is being used for ulterior motives."

Both bills had been distributed by the office of the sergeant at arms and both bore the signature of the Queen's Printer showing they had come from his office.

CCF members complained the second printing had an explanatory statement which actually contained parts of a speech made by Labor Minister Wicks.

HOUSE POLLED

The Speaker polled the House and found that almost all of the 10-man CCF opposition and about the same number of Social Credit members had the copy containing the statement. The others had the copy with the blank back.

The Speaker said the bill with the statement had no perforations for entry into members' loose-leaf books. It was not a "proper bill."

He declared that "this is a serious matter" and promised a full investigation, though he reminded the House that his office had nothing to do with the printing of legislation.

The bill to which Mr. Strachan objected contained a 28-line explanation — in addition to fine-print "explanatory notes" on an inside page. The statement contained such assertions as "this bill establishes equality between management and labor in respect to labor disputes."

(After the hubbub in the House Queen's printer Don McDiarmid hurried down to the legislature. He explained to reporters that on the first printing the explanation was printed on a separate sheet. When more copies were ordered he saved paper, time and printing by running the explanation on the fourth and previously-blank page, instead of on a separate sheet.)

Later when the first printed copies of the government's new legislation outlawing picketing of government buildings became available, legislative reporters found it too contained a "statement" printed on the back page.

The statement was the same one which had been given reporters earlier as a government statement in support of the Constitution Act amendments outlawing picketing of government property.

It was expected to create a new uproar when the printed bill reaches the floor of the House.
